In This Chapter Image editing with layers Composing the perfect picture with layers Adding special effects to your pictures Copying and pasting layers Using layer masks and layer effects Using actions in Photoshop Think of layer as a level in a puddle of water. You can drag all the water in a puddle to a new level. The layers on a page are like those levels. You can move each layer out of the way, change the overall level of each layer, and so on, to get the picture you want. It's like having several levels on a single piece of film where you can move and adjust each level independently. To edit a picture that includes layers, you can move, rotate, and change opacity and color settings of each layer independently. You can work with Photoshop's layers in one of two ways: * You can create new layers for each change you make and then move layers about. These layers are like containers, with rules for that layer's appearance, including color and transparency. * You can apply Photoshop's layer effects to all the layers in a file. These effects include effects such

The present invention is directed to a method for the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats. A method for the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats and a related apparatus are known from DE 28 41 666 A1. Retainer rods for vehicle seats are placed into a mold and first of all formed by injection molding. In this known production method, a liquid plastic is injected into the mold at a temperature T1 at which the plastic undergoes a crosslinking reaction. Thereafter, a cooling system is provided in which the surrounding mold wall is cooled, a temperature T2 being specified for this system. Moreover, the molding device, which is designed for production of retainer rods for vehicle seats of a given length, can be used only for this type of production. This means that for the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats of a different length, a different molding device must be provided. Moreover, this known production method is very labor-intensive, is very time-consuming and thus is very expensive. A further disadvantage is that the molded retainer rods can be only partially straightened, since the material has only partially solidified. In other words, if the molded retainer rods are pulled out of the mold, the molded retainer rods are not completely straight. It is an object of the present invention to construct a method for the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats in such a manner that the use of expensive molds is substantially avoided. This object is achieved in that in the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats and retainer rods for vehicle seats of different length, the same polymer material, with the exception of the specific crosslinking temperature, can be used to produce the retainer rods for vehicle seats of different length. The invention is based on the recognition that if a polymer material which, in the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats, is hardened at a first temperature, is cooled down to a second temperature, and is then again hardened at a third temperature, can be used for the production of different lengths of retainer rods for vehicle seats, the material which is hardened at the third temperature, without any additional measures, can be used to form retainer rods for vehicle seats of different lengths. This advantageously eliminates the requirement for a completely different production apparatus for retainer rods for vehicle seats of different lengths. Moreover, if the same polymer material is used for the production of retainer rods for vehicle seats of different lengths and retainer rods for vehicle seats of Six Asian-American students and two Caucasian students were expelled from the Harvard College last week over cheating allegations and sex assault charges against a black male suspect. The students have since been cleared of any wrongdoing and were reinstated to Harvard, but they are still being demonized by pro-Trump groups. Nearly 30 of the 40 students implicated were Asian and Asian-American. The two white students were later cleared. "What is ridiculous is that those who committed this cheating scheme are now being hunted down by Department of Justice and the FBI," attorney Eugene T. Donaldson, who represents several of the Asian students, said Friday, according to The Boston Globe. "We seek to clarify at this point of time that a detailed interview and a detailed confession were extracted from a Caucasian student and she's been exonerated in all this. The White male student is being defended," said Donaldson. A 2016 New York Times article posted on the Harvard Crimson website states, "Out of the 40 people implicated in the ring, three are black and all the three are from a single dorm, The Freshman School. Out of that entire group, only one of the accused, a black student named Henry Louis Gates Jr., initially faced charges for breaking into the house. All 40 students have now been expelled from the college.
